The Mystery Of The Blue Train

Agatha Christie

The Mystery of the Blue Train is a murder mystery novel by Agatha Christie. It was first published in 1928 and tells the story of a brutal murder aboard the luxury train Blue Train from London to the Riviera. The victim was a millionaire heiress, Ruth Kettering, whose jewels were stolen. Hercule Poirot, the ever-attentive detective, investigates the case. Christie declared that this was certainly the worst book she had ever written. The novel features her iconic detective Hercule Poirot and is part of the Poirot series. It was later adapted into a TV episode titled "The Mystery of the Blue Train".
